4liter turbocharged and intercooled four climbed from 215 in the first edition to 230 horsepower, with even more available via the various aftermarket upgrade kits available through Mopar. It was capable of 0to60mph times in the midfivesecond range and could cover a quartermile in just over 14 seconds, and in three years of production, Dodge sold more than 25,000 of them. But the Caliber is obviously not a Neon, and the differences go well beneath its daring new duds. So the sequel question is germane here. Will this SRT4 II be another hit with the tuner tribe. Or will it be another Caddyshack II. But thats where the likeness ends. The hurryup Caliber is driven by a boosted version of an allnew, allaluminum DOHC 16valve four the previous engine had an iron block, developed as a joint venture among DaimlerChrysler, Hyundai, and Mitsubishi, called GEMA, for Global Engine Manufacturing Alliance. It has a production facility in Dundee, Michigan, and the initial DaimlerChrysler yield is a threeengine family 1.8, 2.0, and 2.4 liters. There are new Mahle pistons, designed for a lower stock compression ratio 8.61 versus 10.51, forged steel connecting rods, valves designed for higher operating temps, heftier bottomend bearings, oil squirters to keep the con rods and pistons cool, and an external oil cooler. Air finds its way into the system via a Valeo airtair intercooler about 50 percent bigger than the previous intercooler, according to Gladysz and stock intake manifold. The fuel pump delivers higher flow, and there are bigger injectors delivering the combustibles. But under ideal conditions, the turbo produces max boost of 16 psi, and with everything in optimum the new engine will churn 300 horsepower at 6000 rpm and 260 poundfeet of torque across an unusually broad range, from 2000 on to the horsepower peak. As with the previous SRT4, this adds up to a pretty seductive bangforbuck story, only more so.

Aside from six speeds — the previous SRT4 tranny had only five — the most appealing traits of this new gearbox which uses a shift mechanism from the manual trans used in the European diesel version of the Caliber are a crisp feel and a positive sense of engagement, traits conspicuously absent in the gardenvariety Caliber tested in this issue. The question is how much less. The Caliber SRT4 is going to weigh in substantially heavier than the old SRT4 — at least 200 pounds — but even so, with all that torque and horsepower on tap, we expect numbers in the middle of the fivesecond scale. And the top end, according to Helbig, will be pretty high. It was part of the deal with the previous SRT4, and despite various countermeasures — equallength halfshafts, for example — its going to be part of the deal with the new one. As youd expect, the new hot rods underpinnings are upgraded to keep pace with the turbo motors big punch heavier front knuckles, heavier hubs, beefier wheel bearings, higher spring rates, stiffer dampers, heavyduty knuckles up front, heavier front and rear antiroll bars, and a quicker ratio for the rackandpinion steering system. The standard tire will be an allseason Goodyear RSA, with Goodyear F1s optional. This last is not mere eye candy, according to Heuschele. The seats lack the big head bolsters of the previous version, a welcome update. The SRT gang wont say so, but the Caliber doesnt look like a candidate for racing preparation. Although the static ride height is a halfinch lower than the standard Calibers, it still rides higher than the Neon. That, plus its high profile, adds up to a high center of gravity, and the higher curb weight doesnt help, either. Looking at it from the streetmachine perspective, theres also a question, in our minds at least, whether the blocky styling is going to seduce the tuner crowd.
